SCHOOL OF FIRE TO OPEN FRIDAY AT SCHOFIELD

Maj. Henry E. Eames Detailed at Head; Will Start Two Classes

Through general orders issued to day from Hawaiian Department headquarters, a school of fire is established at Schofield Barracks. Major Henry E. Eames, 32nd Infantry, being designated as commandant.

1st Lieut. G. Barrett Glover, 32nd Infantry, and 2nd Lieut. Ora M. Baldwin, 25th Infantry, are named as instructors to assist Major Eames in the work.

According to the orders the machine gun company, 2nd Infantry, and the machine gun company, 32nd Infantry, are detailed for duty at the school from the beginning date September 15 to October 14, a month's period.

In addition to this there will be a special course for non-commissioned officers from each company of infantry, one man from each company to be recommended by the commanding officer of his regiment. Major Eames stated today that this special course will include about 40 members. The purpose of this course is to furnish instruction in the operation of the Vickers-Maxim machine gun, he stated, the graduates to be placed in command of these guns upon the completion of their course.

There will be in all courses in musketry, machine gun work and field operations. General field instruments, communication systems, technique of fire, preparation and conduct of fire and similar work will be included.

"This school is to be established as a model for future schools at the Canal Zone and in the Philippines," says the major. "It is the first school of the kind established since the one at Fort Sill."

As Major Eames installed the Fort Sill school he should meet with success in this undertaking. He is the author of numerous books on firing and is considered by army men as one of the best authorities in this line. Eames comes out strongly in favor of the Benet machine gun.

"This is the style of gun which caused so much talk in recent operations in Mexico," he says, "the claim being made that it will jam easily. I propose to demonstrate that the Benet gun is perfectly reliable and that it is not deserving of the black eye given it over that incident. There is nothing wrong with the gun."

CLAIMS IS ONLY LIVING SURVIVOR OF MOI WAHINE

Telling a thrilling tale of a 48-hour battle with mountainous waves in the Molokai channel, Kim Young Jun, a Korean, appeared at the office of U. S. Marshal J. J. Smiddy today and claimed to be the only living survivor of the crew of the schooner Moi Wahine, which was struck and sunk in 1912 by the lighthouse tender Kukui.

"He is still thinking of suing the Kukui," said Marshal Smiddy, who had a long conversation with the man. A Korean interpreter affirmed this statement.

Sam Manu, captain of the Moi Wahine, who swam for 15 hours after the wreck of the schooner, and finally reached land, died about three years ago. The Korean says that some time after the wreck, Capt. Sam identified him as a member of the crew.

Kim says that, on the night of the wreck all of the schooner's lights were burning and that the Kukui was seen approaching by the watch, who called out.

"The Kukui struck once, backed away, and struck again, then steamed on," the Korean declared, through an interpreter.

He says that the crew was composed of five Koreans and one Hawaiian boy, besides Capt. Sam. The four Koreans and the Hawaiian were never heard from. When the schooner was sinking, Kim says, he cut away a big piece of sail, and floated on this until it finally sank. Then he was forced to swim. He reached Kahoolawe and was rescued by an old Japanese fisherman.

Kim is believed to be the same Korean who appeared at the police station shortly after the wreck and claimed to be a survivor. The Korean who visited the marshal today says he was permanently injured as a result of the wreck.
